Gerard Egan, Ph.D., is Emeritus Professor of Psychology and Organizational Studies at Loyola University of Chicago. He also conducts workshops in these areas both in the United States and abroad and is a consultant at a variety of companies and institutions worldwide.

Wow. This book was absolutely dreadful. I would not wish this workbook on my worst enemy. If you are required to use this workbook, try your best not to fall behind because it is nightmare to get through. Egan, get over yourself!

A good workbook for developing counselors. Egan's terminology is not mainstream, but the point comes across.

Good workbook. Layout could've been a little better; too busy at times.

This is boring and repetitive. Would never recommend this book to be used in class.

It is very used but getting me through the class. I don't write in it but someone already had so it has some wear to it. Again doing the job needed.

Great thanks

I can't say a lot about this book other than "prepare to burn a lot of time trying to complete the assignments."

The manual accompanied the text book very well and helped prepare me to be a better helper. Some of the exercises I was able to use with the client I was working with that semester to get her to open up. It involves looking inward at yourself which helps you better understand Egan's concept. It's definitely a useful tool to keep and use.
